Beekneper Becomes Proof Through Inoculation with the Poison.

That a person who has been often stung by bees becomes in time inmune to the poison of the sting is a :serted by Dr. H. F. Parker, according to the Medical Times. He reports that when he first began to keep bees he was frequently stung, and that each sting was attended with acute pain; but that as time went on the pain and swelling became less. In the following year, while transferring a hive of bees, he had an experience which he thus relates:

"Sting followed sting in succession in legs, arms, fingers, neck and face. I imagined what a picture I would present, closed eyes and swollen hands and feet. I could feel the needle-like thrust, but then it did not teem to pain as much, and at last finished the task. With aching head, slight nauses and vertigo slowly coming on. I left my task with a sigh of relief for what was accomplished, and filled with wonderment as to he has an incurable heart trouble.

merely slightly raised red spots, like little pimples, with the red sting in the center, as the result of each and every sting. I must have had something like 40 of them on various parts of my body. My clothes were full of them, but they, being so thick, did not allow the stings to penetrate. The pedals."-Catholic Standard. dizziness, nausea and headache left me, and 'Richard was himself again.'

"When I again visited my bees I did not dread the stinging properties any longer, at least not so much as formerly, and then, and ever since, I have found that when a bee does sting me the pain is only sharp for an instant and there is an absence of the after-swelling. * * *

"I have since been stung many more times than I was at that time, and yet none of the symptoms above referred to have been reproduced. Am I not, therefore, immune to the poison of the honey bee, at least to a certain extent?

"All nuthorities on bee culture state the fact, as a crumb of comfort to novices in beekeeping, that the poison of a bee will produce less and less effect upon their systems. 'Old beekeepers,' it is said, 'like Mithridates, appear almost to thrive upon the poison itself. Huish speaks of seeing the bald head of Bonner, a celebrated practical apiarist, covered with stings, which seemed to produce upon him no unpleasant effect.' Rev. Mr. Kleine advises beginners to allow them elves to be stung frequently, assuring them that in two seasons their systems will become accustomed to the poison. * * *

"In conclusion let me state that I firmly believe that the beekeeper becomes inoculated with the poison of the hee, and usually becomes proof, or at least immune, against it, is no more to be doubted than the fact that vaccination is a preventive against amallpox."

CATCHING A MILK THIEF.

Mow a Philadelphian Rid Himself of a Petty Nuisance.

A Philadelphia man has devised a method of preventing one of the most vexatious forms of petty thievery-stealing milk from householdars' doorsteps. His experience leaves the reader somewhat in doubt as to the success of the method, but at all events it is worth trying. He put a milk can of his own on the stoop, fastened a piece of twine to the bottom of it and then ran the twine under the door, and by devious ways upstairs and into his bedroom. Then he tied the string around his finger, and went to bed secure in the knowledge that he would be informed as soon as the thief touched the can. Beside him he put a shotgun, both barrels loaded with light charges. Rarly in the morning a jerk of the signal line all but pulled off his finger. Before he had time to reach the front door the fhief was far down the street with a policeman in pursuit. The inventor, in his righteous wrath, very nearly shot the policeman. Between them they recognized the fugitive, and, though he has not been arrested, he is not likely to steal any more milk .- N. Y. Post.

URBAN ÆSTHETICS.

Progress in Making Cities Safe and Healthful.

There is in New York an organization known as a "Municipal Artsociety," which has for its declared purpose nothing less than the evolution of a city beautiful out of the five disjointed boroughs comprising the Crenshaw, Councilman Marrs, Dr C T Ryland, American metropolis. Here, indeed, says the Philadelphia Record, is something worth working for-something that will endure as an issue and an inspiration. ly in the mushroom cities of the union, has been confined largely to two factors-sanitation and transportation. Streets are cleaner and better paved than formerly, sewers larger and more skillfully built, charitable agencies and systems of public protection more widely diffused, archtectural forms more closely adapted to intended uses, and public convenience in rapid transit and in recreation more sedulously consulted; but creation and construction have been alike desultory and haphazard. In every large city the urgent demands of increasing populations have so far outron the capacities of public and private sources of supply that even necessary elements of urban exist- Jr., Miss Minute King. ence have been stinted in supply. It is difficult to appeal effectively to popular sympathy for a city beautiful when water supply is bad, public school facilities inadequate and means of local communication and transportation deficient. In truth, there can be little hope of results from such entreaty during the earlier formative period of modern municipalities.

With all our boasted progress and enlightenment, the general plan of the congeries of habitations which the spirit of improvement, and nothing to mere aestheticism.
